Mr. Carlisle said in his Louisville speech that there is of the gold in this country $148,000,000 in the United States Treasury, $154,000,000 in clearing-houses and banks, and in State banks, trust companies, &c., $329,000,000; $631,000,000 in all. Every dollar of it, although it forms a part of the alleged circulation, is locked up.

Miss Honeybuss, a West Virginia, school teacher, had one of the big boys punished for stealing a kiss from her. With such a suggestive name as that the dear Honey shouldn't have blamed the boy. How could a boy be expected to resist such a seductive combination as honey and buss? The average boy would buss or bust.

The official dog catcher of Trenton, N. J., keeps tally of his business with the dog-tails, which he presents to the auditor to be counted. The auditor accepts his tale without the confirmatory proof of counting them. The auditor hasn't much use for a dog with a tail and less for a tail without a dog.

A big meteor fell into a lake in Washington. It didn't knock the bottom out of the lake, but struck it with such a thump that it shook the houses for miles around and made it exceedingly uncomfortable for the fish which had a ten hour boil. KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Convention of the Grand Lodge at Mount Airy—Asheville Selected as the Next Place of Meeting.

Messrs. E. G. Parmele, Walker Taylor, John L. Dudley, Thomas D. Meares, S. Behrends, I. Greenwald, W. J. Woodward, officers and representatives of the Grand Lodge K. of P., returned yesterday from the convention at Mount Airy. Prof. Washington Catlett, who was with the party, is expected to return this evening.

Mr. Thomas D. Meares, P. G. C., of Wilmington, was re-elected Supreme Representative to the Supreme Lodge for the term of four years.

P. G. C.—C. E. Holton, Greensboro.
G. C.—Charles A. Webb, Asheville.
G. V. C.—Washington Catlett, Wilmington.
G. P.—S. B. Bandy, Monroe.
G. M. of E.—John Ward, Raleigh.
G. K. of R. and S.—C. D. Benbow, Greensboro.
G. M. of A.—H. D. Hudson, Shelby.
G. I. G.—D. A. McMillan, Fayetteville.
G. O. G.—J. W. Hawkins, Mount Airy.

Asheville was selected as the next place of meeting, the third Tuesday in June, 1896.

Mr. S. Behrends, of Germania Lodge, No. 4., was appointed a member of the Finance Committee.

For the first time in its history the Grand Lodge officially recognized the Uniform Rank, by making an appropriation to enable divisions now organized to carry on their work.

Gen. Kennedy of the Grand Domain K. of P. of Illinois was in attendance at the Grand Lodge and rendered valuable assistance in preparing the new constitution which was adopted and in many other important matters.

Blue Ridge Lodge K. of P. of Mount Airy and many other citizens of that place did everything in their power to make the stay of visiting delegates pleasant.

BENEDICTS VS. BACHELORS.

An interesting game of base ball was played at Hilton Park yesterday afternoon by the "Benedicts" and the "Bachelors," for the benefit of the "Shelter of the Silver Cross." It ended in a victory for the Bachelors by a score of 17 to 16. The following were the players: Bachelors—Lanson, pitch; Robinson, catch; Allen, first base; Gouverneur, second base; Lippitt, third base; Chadbourn, short stop; MacRae, right field; Williams, centre field; Jones, left field.

Benedicts—Robertson, pitch; Wise, catch; Turrentine, first base; Hues, second base; Evans, third base; Manning, short stop; Latimer, centre field; Nutt, left field; Gerkin, right field.

Ed. Warren was umpire and J. W. Graham scorer.

The boys all played a fine game and each fought hard for victory. Triby Lanson was "out of sight" as pitcher; Wise was "a dandy" behind the bat; Gouverneur was the finest batter. It was a tie between "Jumbo" Robertson and Col. Ed. Latimer as to which was the best base runner. Gerkin was a "peach" in right field. Hues played a good game at second for the Benedicts. Allen, "Our Jimmie," is the finest first baseman in the city. The captains of the two teams are under obligations to the manager of "The Orton," Mr. J. E. Montague, for the use of two rooms by the teams for dressing purposes.

The receipts amounted to about forty dollars, and will be turned over to the "Shelter of the Silver Cross."

The Naval Reserves.

This will be a gala day with the Naval Battalion, the occasion being the inspection by Assistant Secretary McAdoo and Lieutenant Niblack, of the Navy. Saturday is the worst day in the week for such an event, many of the Reserves are tied down to business, still Lieutenant J. C. Morrison will make every effort to have full ranks and a first-class show. The boys will wear their white duck suits, with leggins and equipments, and meet at the armory at two o'clock sharp. The visitors will arrive on the Wisteria about 10 o'clock. Commander Winslow is here from Newbern to participate and assist in entertaining the distinguished visitors.

The Captain's gig, manned by the best oarsmen of the Division, will be on duty all day.

At a meeting of the battalion officers of the Naval Reserves last night it was decided to request all steam craft and mills to blow a salute when the Wisteria arrives. It was also requested that all bells and the fire alarm be rung at that time as a mark of respect to the distinguished visitor. Arrangements have been made to entertain him at luncheon at "The Purcell," by the proprietor, Mr. W. E. Springer, an honorary member of the Reserves, and Mr. Hinton, the caterer on the cruise of 1893 and 1894; the battalion officers feeling that he should be entertained solely by the Reserves.

Gun Club Shoot.

Mr. R. H. Grant was the lucky man who won the medal and the season-pass over the Wilmington Street Railway yesterday at the shoot of the Eastern Dog and Game Protective Association. The wind was blowing very strong, but still the following scores were made out of twenty-five shots each:

Grant, 18; S. Heinsberger, 16; "Split Moon," 15; Lodor, 14, Pickett, 13; Oliver, 12; "Togga," 6, "The Colonel," 6; Davis, 4.

The Association will meet to-night at the City Hall to take action in regard to the dogs taken up by the city dog cart. Several badges have been stolen off of very good dogs and they have been killed.

DOCTOR WHARTON.

His Farewell Sermon at the First Baptist Church — Subject. "Recognition in Heaven."

Dr. Wharton preached his farewell sermon yesterday on the subject of "Recognition in Heaven," from the text (1st Cor. 18th chapter and 12th verse." "Now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as also I am known."

"I know three things about religion—that it has made me a better man, a happier man and more useful to myself and the community in which I live. This, all Christians know. But I desire to know more of what Christianity promises to its professors—its offer of a state of blissful rest in the life beyond—of heaven. I believe I am going to heaven. The average man so believes and I am glad of it. But to assure yourself of your enjoyment of the joys of heaven you must be in the way—there is only one way and that is through Christ. If you are a true and sincere follower of Christ you are in the way. There are many things concerning the future state that we desire to be informed on. Among them is, shall we recognize each other in heaven? We have loved ones there. Shall we know them? Let us see what reason and revelation teaches.

"Heaven is a place—real, substantial—not like unto such fabrics as dreams are made of. It is where Jesus is. Its inhabitants are people—John on lonely Patmos saw them—great crowds in white raiment, the redeemed who had come out of great tribulation. Bodies they have, but spiritual ones divested of these material elements that chain us here to sin. Are these spiritual bodies recognizable? It is assumed from Genesis to Revelations that they are. We are sown a natural body, we rise a spiritual, changed in our relations to those of our companions in the beyond. The relationship of wife, husband, parent and child no longer obtains, we are all brothers, all sisters in that great family of the redeemed, gathered to sound our Father's praises through the ages. What are the reasons that we assert that we shall recognize each other in heaven? Jesus compares the gathering of the elect to a marriage feast. What would we think of a feast where none of the guests knew each other? An old wife asked her aged husband if he thought he would know her in heaven. 'Wife,' he replied, 'I know you now and I have no reason to suppose that I will be a bigger fool up yonder than I am here.' I think our intellectual faculties sharpened will enable us to recognize all men without an introduction.

"Again, take the scene on the Mount of Transfiguration. If Peter knew Moses and Elias in the flesh how can you suppose that he would not know them when his spirit had put on immortality? Paul speaks of the people that he had been instrumental in leading: 'In that day you shall be my joy.' Must he not know them in heaven if they are to be a joy to him? Ah! friend, devote yourself to the labor of bringing some soul to Christ. What a joy it will be to be reminded in heaven of some good action done on earth. A soul saved by your personal endeavor will be for you a joy and a crown. Some day, too, the dear Master will remind us of our good deeds done to some poor unfortunate. Like music to the ear, suffusing our breast with joy unspeakable, as the dear Voice breathes, 'Inasmuch as you did it unto the least of these, My brethren, ye did it unto Me.' When you help the helpless you help Jesus.

"An old simple man dreampt one night that Jesus stood by him and told him that he would be present to partake of his frugal repast on the morrow. Breakfast time saw the little table of the old man set with more than usual attention to neatness. The minutes rolled by, but still Christ came not to the old man's table. At last stepping to the doorway he espied among the surging crowd a little girl—eyes red with weeping—dress tattered and torn. The old man asked her in to partake of his breakfast. That night in his dreams Christ again stood by the old man's bedside. The tailor tearfully reproached him for not appearing at his morning meal. With the great eyes shining with love, the voice tender and low, the Master said 'I was there—I was the little girl. Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of them my brother, you did it unto me.'

"Let us know each other here better. Sow to your fellow man more sympathy. Forgive your enemies. Do not wait for them to make the advance for you cannot afford, my friend, to go down into the valley shadows with anger against any of God's children rankling in your heart. On the cross, suffering the agony and pangs of a felon's death, Christ not only forgave but prayed the Father that he would not suffer his righteous indignation to fall on his enemies. Be like Christ. Forgive. You must meet your fellow travelers some day elsewhere. Go not from hence with anger against anyone—for

"We shall meet each other on the other side,
Some sweet day."

At the conclusion of his address Dr. Wharton spoke warmly of the people of this city and thanked them individually and collectively for the warm appreciation as shown by their acts of personal kindness and the interest manifested in his work. He would not say good-bye, but "we shall meet again."

Dr. Wharton while here was the guest of Mr. J. W. Norwood, President of the Atlantic National Bank. The Doctor left for Charlotte on the afternoon train He will be long remembered by our citizens and all, without regard to sect, will earnestly unite in expressing a wish that he and they "may meet again" soon.

RALEIGH HAPPENINGS.

PUBLIC PRINTER MAKING SLOW PROGRESS PRINTING THE LAWS.

The Arrington Tribunal—Blunders in Engrossing Bills of the Late Legislature—Piano Dealers Failed to Take Out Licenses—Fine Horses.

[Special Star Correspondence.]

RALEIGH N. C., June 21.

Mr. J. M. Stewart, the public printer, is in the city. He has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he says he has been on business in the interest of his firm. Mr. Stewart firmly refuses to talk about his contract to the State. In reply to a question asking him was his firm having their binding done in Richmond, he said the work was being well done. Mr. Stewart told me that he only had twelve printers in his employ just at present.

Mr. Henry C. Dockery, of Rockingham, was here yesterday. He says the question of creating the County of Scotland will be voted upon in August

"Chief Justice" Campbell is wandering the streets alone in his glory. The condition of the old man is truly pitiable. His love for whiskey has conquered him and he goes about all the while abusing newspaper men. He has threatened violence against two local reporters and says he will use his hickory on them at first sight. The telegram from "Acting Chief Justice" Bryan which I sent you yesterday is presumptuous on the part of Mr. Bryan to say the least, because every one clearly knows that his election was arranged by parties (Populists and Republicans) in order to adjourn the court. Campbell and Phillips were both drunk at the time. Phillips not being able to work Mr. Bryan signed "chairman" after his name in the telegram. Well, there were a dozen witnesses present and your correspondent is one who will testify that he was only elected acting chairman. The minutes of the court as filed by the secretary, Mr. Haisson, which are on file at Mr. Furman's office state that he was elected acting chairman. The only object in electing Bryan acting chairman was to dissolve the court, as Campbell was on a constant jag and did not wish to leave the city.

Bryan also stated in his telegram that the committee was called together without his consent and contrary to the wishes of the majority of the committee. This last statement confirms the suspicion held by a number of people that Bryan has been doing all he can to prevent having a meeting. It is now believed that Populist influence has prevented the committee from meeting.

An act of the recent Legislature published in the new laws states that the Commissioners of Polk county must sell bonds to buy a farm in Polk county for the support of paupers of Davie county and repairing the jail of Davie county. The ignorance of the clerk who engrossed the bills is remarkable. Where he should have said countersigned the words county signed were used, bond for board and Davie for said. Mr. Batchelor, of the Secretary's office, said the printer made no mistake, as he was very careful in examining the original.

This morning the State Treasurer received a telegram from Mr. J. P. Arrington, sheriff of Nash county, asking if Ludden & Bates, piano dealers, had complied with section 25 of the Revenue act, which requires piano dealers to pay a tax of $250 per annum. Mr. Worth replied that the above named company had not taken out license. The agent of the company in Nashville has violated the law and is now under arrest.

North Carolina has two of the greatest horses on the grand circuit to represent her this year. John R. Gentry, 2.05¾, the king of pacing stallions, owned by Banks Holt, is in good condition and his admirers are confident that he will better his record several seconds, which was made in a terrible dust and wind storm in Lexington, Ky. It was considered the greatest run ever made under the circumstances by prominent racing authorities. Mr. Plummer Batchelor says he expects Baronet, Mr. Holt's trotter, to better 2.07.

A TELEGRAPHIC BLUNDER.

[Charleston News and Courier.]

It has now come to light that there was an error in the dispatch which was sent out from New York the other day announcing that an alliance had been formed between the Southern and the Atlantic Coast Line systems. While no official denial or correction of the dispatch has been made, it has come to light that what the dispatch should have stated was that the alliance had been formed between the Southern system and the Atlantic and Danville Road. No one is surprised in the least at a combine of this kind. The Atlantic and Danville is a road which runs from Danville to Norfolk, and for a number of years has been closely affiliated with the old Richmond & Danville properties, in fact it was a part of the old system out of which the Southern was made and it has just now been taken into the deal. The Atlantic & Danville is and must always remain a very important factor in the Southern system, as it gives the Southern its only practical route into Norfolk.

When the dispatch was published stating that the alliance had been formed between the Southern and the Atlantic Coast Line, the News and Courier published an article discrediting the truth of the statement. It showed that nothing could be gained by either system in any such combine, and it gave some of the reasons for that opinion. The fact of the matter is that despite some very wild rumors regarding the intention of the Southern people ultimately to gobble up pretty much all of the South Atlantic systems it is absurd to suppose that the Atlantic Coast Line is likely to be one of its earliest victims. No one ever doubted that it would be more than a question of time before the Atlantic and Danville was taken under the wing of the Southern.

WHEN WILL IT BE?

Many of the gold standard advocates profess to be bimetallists, but contend that bimetallism would be an impossibility without international agreement, and in the same breath they say there is not the slightest prospect for that and therefore the agitation of the silver question is worse than useless. Both the Democratic and Republican gold standard bimetallists—so called—are together on that; they both insist on a condition which is so remote that no prophet can say when it will be, if ever. The men who talk that way are not sincere bimetallists and that is simply the recourse they have to enable them to dodge the question, appear friendly to silver and avoid coming out squarely for or against it.

The bimetallic sentiment is undoubtedly growing in Europe, but unfortunately money rules on the other side of the ocean as it does on this side, and the law-makers there are controlled by influences and agencies similar to those which influence our legislative bodies. The voice of the masses amounts to but little there, even less than it does in this country, and here the people have had but very little to do so far in shaping our financial policies.

The people were not consulted when the contract between the bondholders and the Government was annulled by act of Congress, and it was decreed that the bondholder should be paid in "coin." That act saddled about $500,000,000 on the American people, and practically added that much to the national debt That was done without consulting the people who have that debt to pay.

The people were not consulted either when in 1873 Congress demonetized silver by dropping the dollar from the list of coins, leaving only subsidiary silver to be coined. It does not matter whether that act was passed clandestinely or not, Congress had no more right to demonetize silver than it had to demonetize gold, or both silver and gold, and put the country on a paper basis. Coin—both silver and gold—was the constitutional money of the country and it was an arbitrary assumption of power when Congress meddled with and undertook to demonetize either. What the friends of silver, the true bimetallists, insist on now, is a return to the constitutional landmarks, and that the same power which struck the demonetizing blow at silver undo the wrong and restore silver to the place it occupied before that stealthy blow was struck. That's all.

The Congress of the United States did not ask the consent or opinion of European nations when it demonetized silver. It did it simply at the dictates of the bondholders and money lenders who in those days were a mighty power in the national legislature. They followed in the wake of some nations and some nations followed them, and all followed the dictates of the money powers who were conspiring for their own gain.

But if silver is ever to be rehabilitated by this country it must be remonetized independently as it was demonetized independently. There was no international Congress to decide upon demonetizing it, and this country should not wait for an international Congress to decide upon remonetizing it. It would be very well if international agreement could be reached, but as there is no prospect of that being done and no one can tell when or if it will ever be done, what is this country to do? Wait, wait and keep waiting through the indefinite years, as if it was a colonial dependence of some of the gold countries of Europe, waiting to be told what to do, and not daring to move until told? This country is perfectly competent to settle that question for itself and the sooner it does it, and restores silver to its former monetary dignity the sooner other powers will follow our example. They can be forced much easier than they can be persuaded, and the sooner this country acts the sooner they will act, or be forced to act by their own necessities. They will never do it until it becomes a matter of necessity.

It doesn't necessarily follow that this would involve unlimited coinage. Something similar to that provided for in the Bland Allison act would give the world to understand that this country intended to stand by silver and the double standard instead of the single gold standard.

MINOR MENTION.

Twenty or even ten years ago it was rare to find women employed in other than domestic service, with the needle, or as governesses, teachers, &c., and in the latter they were discriminated against, and are yet, receiving less compensation than male teachers who perform no more nor any higher order of service. But within the past ten years especially women have been making considerable progress in entering fields of endeavor which were formerly closed to them, and we have little doubt that the present decade will show still greater advance in this respect than the past, because they have demonstrated their capacity to perform the duties they undertake and the increasing liberality of the age is removing the barriers that obstructed their progress. The following from the report of the census bureau shows the success that women have met with in entering occupations which were formerly almost monopolized by men:

The meeting of the Republican clubs at Cleveland, Ohio, was under the management of the old stagers and therefore steered clear of the silver question and avoided what might have been a bad mix if that question had been forced to the front. The delegations there were so evenly divided that there is no telling what the expression would have been if free silver had been submitted to a vote and this is doubtless the reason why they decided to let it rest to be dealt with by the National Convention when it meets, which was a proper, and under the circumstances, a wise thing for them to do. The strong sentiment, however, in favor of free silver will doubtless have its influence on the National Convention, and cause a more decided leaning to free silver than it might otherwise show. Viewed from a purely political standpoint the action of these clubs shows the splendid discipline in that party, and how easily they are kept in line, even on a question which is so earnestly discussed and on which there is such a radical difference of opinion. There are silver men and gold men in the Republican party, but when the lines of battle are drawn they will be found marching together, and they will make a platform on which they can stand together.

We are not among those who believe that more money, whether it come by the free coinage of silver, State banks or otherwise, will prove a panacea for all the ills that mortal flesh is heir to, for however abundant money may be there must be good and sensible methods to reap the full benefit of it; but we do believe that an enlarged volume of currency, and a more equable distribution of it than we now have would do much to put the people on a solid footing and start this country on a career of prosperity. There is little danger of too much or of too "cheap" money in this country, or of more than the American people with their push and enterprise could find profitable use for. There is always more danger of too little than too much, and that's what's the matter now. It is folly to talk about an abundance of money when the bulk of it is controlled by a few men and locked up in vaults from which it cannot be enticed, save with gilt-edge securities,' which the people who need money most cannot give. Double the per capita circulation of this country with money that will circulate, and can't be locked up, and the hum of new industries and new enterprises would be heard all over the land, especially in this Southland, whose possibilities and energies are cramped simply for want of the capital to develop her resources.

The 22-ton Armstrong gun shoots further than it can be heard. It throws a solid shot twelve miles, and it is needless to say that it isn't advisable to be where it falls. In its curve, shot at long range, the ball reaches an altitude of three miles.

—— The opening of the Kiel Canal should serve to stimulate the growing interest in waterways intended to serve commercial purposes or for military purposes. The most promising project of the kind now under consideration is the Nicaragua Canal, which would almost revolutionize a large part of the world's trade. There are minor canal projects also that deserve more encouragement than they receive, among them being the Cape Cod Canal and the scheme to construct a series of strategic waterways along the Atlantic coast. The character of these projects is such that private capital can scarcely be induced to undertake them without Government aid of some sort, and Government aid is generally withheld on theoretical considerations respecting the province of government.—*Phil. SPIRITS TURPENTINE.

— Charlotte News: Mrs. Henrietta Morris Dowd, wife of Mr. J. C. Dowd, died at her home, one mile west of the city, at 11 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Dowd was 58 years of age, and was a native of Chatham county.

— Monroe Journal: Mrs. L. Reid died at her home in Sandy Ridge township on the 9th inst. She was about seventy years old. —— It is said that the cotton produced in Union county is the finest staple grown in the South.

— Concord Standard: Mr. J. P. Allison has had the other wheat of which we spoke, shelled out. Twenty-four heads were produced by one grain planted. The former 19 heads made 698 grains and these 24 made 790. So you see produced from 2 grains planted, 1,488 grains.

He says that not enough of either crop will be harvested for seed.

— Charlotte Observer. Mrs. Lizzie London, wife of J. M. London, a prominent citizen of Pallston, Cleveland county, started from her home Tuesday morning last with the expressed intent of visiting her mother, two miles away, and has not been heard of since. The whole community for miles around have been on the search, but find no trace of her. It is believed she was taken with a sudden stroke of insanity and is wandering through the country.

— Southport Leader: Last Friday, at what is known as Geo. McKeithan's Store, in Town Creek, near the Bell Swamp, in this county, a shooting scrape took place, Jim Tharp shooting Rufus Coleman in the back, the shot nearly passing through Coleman. The cause leading to the shooting seems to have been a dispute over a barrel of turpentine which Coleman, as it is claimed, sold to Tharp and afterwards sold to George Cannon, another store keeper in Town Creek. During the dispute which took place in the above mentioned store, which is now occupied by Tharp as his store, Tharp drew a pistol and shot twice at Coleman, both shots missing their mark. Coleman turned to leave the store when the third shot was fired, with the above result. The last reports say Coleman is dead.

From LaGrippe.

How Dr. Miles' Nervine Restored One of Kentucky's Business Men to Health.

NO DISEASE has ever presented so many peculiarities as LaGrippe. No disease leaves its victims so debilitated, sleepless, nerveless, as LaGrippe.

Mr. D. W. Hilton, state agent of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Kentucky, says: "In 1893 and '90 I had two severe attacks of LaGrippe, the last one attacking my nervous system with such severity that my life was despaired of. I had not slept for more than two months except by the use of narcotics that stupefied me, but gave me no rest. I was only conscious of intense mental weakness, agonizing bodily pain and the fact that I was hourly growing weaker.

When in this condition, I commenced using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. In two days I began to improve and in one month's time I was cured, much to the surprise of all who knew of my condition. I have been in excellent health since and have recommended your remedies to many of my friends."

LIFE.

An angel from the dazzling walls of light
And coma of celestial calm and grace
Swept down the starry distances of space
To this gray earth of shadow and of night.

A woman taught him human love's great might,
Hot tears for scarlet sins left their red trace;
He felt earth's wrongs. His purple pinions base,
And joined the shock of battle for the right.

His seraph soul, shot through with carnal stain,
Deep-carved, a wrong gem with sodden rays,
Dashed the dull heaven he dared not to regain,
And drifting toward the dark, where ends all strife,

In sickness and in poverty and pain,
He sighed, yet smiling whispered, "This was life!"

—New York Sun.

HE COMMANDED THE EMPRESS.

Worth's Word Regarding Her Costumes Was Final—One Exception.

Worth was admitted to the Tuileries whenever he had something fresh to show her majesty. He would arrive there early in the morning and lay out the new toilets and stuffs he brought with him in a small room near her bedchamber. He would then withdraw, leaving his assistant behind him to give all the explanations that might be demanded. On other occasions the empress, who possessed a great deal of taste, would send for him to discuss the various fashions which he had laid before her. But he would rarely change his mind, and it was almost impossible to obtain from him the slightest modification in his dresses.

As a rule, it was the sovereign who had to submit to the will of the man dressmaker. When the trying on came, he was ushered into the presence of her majesty as soon as she had put on the dress. At a glance he detected the slightest imperfection and instructed his assistant how to remedy it. He would never allow the empress to wear a costume the effect of which was not what he expected.

A curious anecdote on this point is related by The Gaulois. The Comtesse de Montijo, mother of the empress, was always a strict observer of court ceremony, and it was Worth who had the making of her dresses. She ordered them "decollete," and being afraid of catching cold she wore a kind of transparent "maillot" to protect her arms and shoulders. The empress had often begged her not to wear low dresses, pointing out that at her age she might well wear high ones, but the countess would not give way. Thereon her majesty sent for Worth and warned him that if he made any more low dresses for her mother she would withdraw her custom from him. The countess protested, but in vain, and Worth for once obeyed orders.

He employed over 800 hands. His stock comprised the richest and most variegated collection of silks, satins and stuffs to be found anywhere. One of the Lyons silk factories worked solely for him. He had a certain talent for designing and drew a sketch in colors of the toilets he invented. Later on he employed an artist to paint his dresses in an album, which will remain in his family as a precious relic. The fall of the second empire affected him deeply, for he was a stanch imperialist. Every year he sent to the empress in exile a nosegay of violets tied up with a ribbon bearing her name in golden letters. He had his own peculiar way of dressing his customers, and his tastes were absolutely original. He was a great lover of jewelry, and his fingers were always covered with diamond rings. He had visited all the capitals of Europe, and there was hardly a personage of mark whom he had not come across. His memory was prodigious and only equaled by his discretion.

He was as generous as he was rich, and there was not a philanthropic institution to which he did not subscribe. During the siege he turned his apartment in the Champs Elysees into an ambulance, where he supported 25 soldiers sick or wounded. Numbers of persons who had seen better days were relieved by him in the most delicate manner. Charity never appealed to him in vain. His good deeds made him popular, and his name will be found in most of the memoirs of the period. The Goncourts allude to him several times in their "Journal," and Mme. Octave Feuillet, widow of the romancist, gives an amusing account in her "Souvenirs" of how, when she wanted a dress for a court ball at once, he improvised one for her in a couple of hours. The rapidity with which he could turn out a costume at a moment's notice was one of his many talents which his rivals tried in vain to imitate with success. He left behind him two sons, who appear to have inherited their father's capacities.—London Globe.

Awkwardness and Spavin.

It is pitiful to see a man who can not ride and whose feats are necessarily confined to a beaten track appear in spurs. If he were going for a walk, it would not matter, for then he would only cut his boots. But it is to be dreaded that before his return, he will have lacerated his horse, and if he should chance to tumble off scored his brand new saddle.

It may be doubted how far it is advisable, even for first rate riders, to arm their heels as a mere point of dress on all occasions. A good horse will do his best without having his sides wounded. When he flinches, either he is not properly asked or he distrusts himself. Nevertheless the spur has many uses, of which he who understands them certainly ought to avail himself.—"The Arabian Horse," Major General Tweedie.

Farinelli was so idolised by his admirers that it was of him an English lady once exclaimed: "One God! One Farinelli!"

John Y. MacRae, druggist, Raleigh, N. C., writes: "Some of the cures made by the Japanese Pile Cure is wonderful, and from my dealings with you for the past three years, I know your guarantee is perfectly good." J. HICKS BUNTING, J. H. HARDIN.

EARLY MINSTRELSY.

GEORGE CHRISTY, ONE OF THE ORIGINATORS OF THE SHOW.

Interesting Scrapbook Left by the Celebrated Burnt Cork Artist—A Friend of Edwin Forrest and a Talented Comedienne.

Negro Minstrelsy In Great Britain.

Mrs. Edwina Forrest Fair, a daughter of the famous George Christy, who established negro minstrelsy in New York in 1847, chatted with me the other day very entertainingly regarding her father's career. She gave me his old scrapbook to refer to and several excellent photographs and some old fashioned engravings.

It seems so long since the days of the Christy minstrels that I rather expected to see an older looking woman than George Christy's daughter appears to be. She is an enthusiast over her father's memory. She has another sister living, and also a brother, George Harrington, who, instead of perpetuating the family trademark, has been known chiefly through his "beefsteak dinners" at the old Morgue club.

"My father, known in private life as George N. Harrington, was a young man when he died," said Mrs. Fair. "He was only 40. He had a fine constitution, it was thought, but he wore his heart on his sleeve and put a year into every day. Being jovial, hearty and generous with every one, even his most humble employee, he was persistently sought by well known persons, and his nature could not resist the compliment he felt their companionship to be.

"One of his very particular friends was Edwin Forrest. A few days before I was born my father declared he would name his child for him. 'What if it's a girl?' asked my mother. 'Then we'll call her Edwina,' replied my father. So you see I was named beforehand. Another friend of his, my brother tells me, was Theodore Thomas, who used to black up and do 'nigger business.'

"And why not? Didn't Edwin Booth try it? It was a pity that my father did not live to make a great name as an actor in white, for he was considered a remarkable low comedian. In burlesque he used to sustain from one to half a dozen characters in a piece and exhibit wonderful versatility. He made a great hit with his Topsy in a burletta on 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' He had a singularly sweet singing voice, and as a dancer he had few equals. He was also a contortionist and seemed blessed with every physical possibility.

"I was 18 years old when I first saw him, and that's a most impressionable age for a girl. I think Billy Birch copied a few of his characteristics, and George Thatcher has given some good imitations of him, but they and such other men as Schoolcraft and Sweatnam are different in general style."

Although I think it is generally understood that the Christy minstrels were the originators of that sort of entertainment, individual negro delineation was done as far back as 1799, at the Federal Street theater, in Boston.

The first idea of minstrelsy in its present shape, or before Mr. Haverly introduced his "Mastodons," came forth in the spring of 1841, for one night only, at the Chatham theater. The company was called the "Virginia minstrels" and was made up by Dan Emmet, Frank Brower, Billy Whitlock and Dick Pelham. The entertainment met with astonishing success. It was repeated subsequently at the Bowery amphitheater and at the Park. Fearing quick opposition here, the company, with G. B. Wooldridge at its head, went to England.

In London it performed for six weeks at the Adelphi in connection with Professor Anderson, then known as "the wizard of the north." A misunderstanding arising, a second company was organised by Pelham and Whitlock in connection with Joe Sweeney, and it traveled through Ireland and Scotland with success.

Another company, called the "Ring and Parker minstrels from Boston," now came along, and while in Liverpool one of the members introduced the character Lucy Long, which became immediately popular.

Simultaneously minstrel companies were being organised in nearly all the American cities, and on the return home of these two organisations they not only found plenty of rivalry, but much improvement on their plan.

Now followed in notable favor the "Kentucky minstrels," the "Congo melodists" and "Buckley's serenaders." Then was organised the famous Christy's, consisting of E. P. Christy, George N. Christy, L. Durand and T. Vaughn.

George, who afterward became the leader and was the joyous spirit of the show, had previously appeared at the old Eagle Street theater, in Buffalo, in 1839, and in 1842 the company started on its existence in the same city in a hall on Water street. George Christy was "bones" and Lansing Durand was "tambo." It is asserted that George was the original Lucy Long, the first to do the "wench business." He also made a hit as Cachuca.

The first appearance of the company in New York was at the Palmo Opera House, in Chambers street. After various visits to other localities it finally settled at 472 Broadway, in 1847, where it remained 11 years. George, finally withdrew from the care of his foster father, E. P. Christy, and with Harry Wood opened another hall at 444 Broadway, and a year later the original party went to California, and George became master of the situation.

After several years of great success Messrs. Wood and Christy opened the Fifth Avenue Opera House, in Twenty-fourth street. Christy's last appearance on the stage was with Hooley's minstrels, in Brooklyn, on May 2, 1867. He died on May 12 at his home and was buried from Trinity chapel three days later. His body is in Cypress Hills cemetery.—New York Herald.

Discouraging.

"John," she said thoughtfully, "of course it is well to be proud of our daughter's success at the seminary, but—but"—

"But what, my dear?" he asked.

"Well, it seems to me that you are a trifle thoughtless at times."

"I don't quite understand you," he said.

"It's all right to speak of her standing in her class," she explained, "and it is all right to be proud of her social accomplishments. Talk of her taste if you wish to, her cooking and her singing lessons, her vivacity, her knowledge of modern languages and her sunny disposition, but—but"—

"Well, what is it? Where have I made any mistake?"

"Why, it's about time to find a husband for her, and I would suggest, John, that you say nothing about her gymnastic work or the fact that she played center rush on the seminary football team. I have noticed that that has a tendency to discourage young men."—Chicago Post.

An Invalid's Amusement.

In Cambridge she other day a small girl was seen picking bits of paper out of a barrel of household refuse that was standing in the street to be removed by the city department, and, when asked what she could be doing said she was hunting up torn letters for her sister, who was sick. "She amuses herself," explained the innocent child, "pasting the pieces together and reading 'em." If this sort of pastime is to become popular with invalids, it behooves people to burn their correspondence instead of tearing it to pieces and casting it into the dust bin. What is fun for some daughter of Eve on a sick couch might prove disastrous to the writers of missives should evil disposed persons take to this singular occupation.—Boston Herald.

Drawn In.

Hanson—How did you come to marry the widow Bonsour instead of her daughter? I thought it was the daughter you were after.

Janson—Well, so I was, to tell the truth, but when I asked Marie to marry me one day she said, "Ask mamma," and when I started to do it I stammered so with nervousness that mamma said "Yes" before I had the question out.—Somerville Journal.

accomplishes for everybody exactly what is claimed for it. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in its universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine.

The Lumberman needs it in case of accident.

The Housewife needs it for general family use.

The Canaler needs it for his teams and his men.

The Mechanic needs it always on his work bench.

The Miner needs it in case of emergency.

The Pioneer needs it—can't get along without it.

The Farmer needs it in his house, his stable, and his stock yard.

The Steamboat man or the Boatman needs it in liberal supply afloat and ashore.

The Horse-fancier needs it—it is his best friend and safest reliance.

The Stock-grower needs it—it will save him thousands of dollars and a world of trouble.

The Railroad man needs it and will need it so long as his life is a round of accidents and dangers.

The Backwoodsman needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, limb and comfort which surround the pioneer.

The Merchant needs it about his store among his employees. Accidents will happen, and when those times come the Mustang Liniment is wanted at once.

Keep a Bottle in the House. 'Tis the best of economy.

Keep a Bottle in the Factory. Its immediate use in case of accident saves pain and loss of wages.

Keep a Bottle Always in the Stable for use when wanted.

IDEAL AND REAL.

He was a reader of Shakespeare,
And longed to woo to his.
She was a whelmical reflirt,
In quest of an E. D. degree.
They stood in the pale, silent moonlight,
He holding her soft, dimpled hand.
A happier lover than he was
Ne'er lived in the land.
For she had just told him, the darling,
A secret he'd long sighed to know.
Ah, lady, you'll guess what the thing was—
That is, if you e'er had a beau.
"My loved one," he murmured in rapture,
With a fine touch of dramatic pose,
"Are you sure that those words you have uttered
Come straight from your warm, tender heart?"
She answered—her full tones were sweeter
Than tones from ten nightingales' tongues—
"Ha, ha! From my heart? How absurd, dear!
The voice always comes from the lungs."

THE FALCON'S FLIGHT

It was a cold, desolate winter, and I was making an official tour in the society of the district intendent. We were driving to the remotest corner of Siberia, about 900 versts in a straight line on the ice of the river, over a thick layer of snow, the rocky formation of the shores on both sides glowering down upon us dark and savage in their sootie splendor. There was nothing worth looking at beyond this. The monotony of the trip served to bring the virtues of my companion into strong relief. He was an old man, tall, with a large, strong face, from which a nose of solid formation protruded; hair cut short and a gray, close cropped beard, but despite his rough exterior one of the best natured of men. He was a bachelor, living all by himself, who had grown gray in the service and accepted lapowki (perquisites) from no matter whom or for what purpose, and had thus gained the esteem and friendship of all who came into contact with him. His three weaknesses were to kill bears, to sing songs and to talk about Siberia, the latter with passionate fondness. Like most of the officials there he was a zealous patriot, and whenever he discoursed upon Siberia and its charms he was apt to lapse into poetry. To offset this he belittled Russia. Although he had never been on the other side of Urals, he insisted that the people there were nothing but a mixture of Tartars and immigrants, devoted to the industry of stealing handkerchiefs and purses.

I twitted him that Siberia was only an imitation of Russia; that it had never produced a song of its own; that its father and schoolmaster were the penal colonists. That aroused him, especially the reflection regarding its dearth of song music, and to disprove it he sang in no unpleasant manner, in his hoarse, age enfeebled bass, sundry old Russian airs with the zealous assurance that they were the purest of Siberian.

"By the way," he suddenly declared, "I'll tell you a story—an actual occurrence—that will show you the sort of songs we sing."

And he began thus:

"It was in the days of my youth, after I had taken service in my country behind the Baikal. I was presiding not far from the Kara region. I knew nearly every convict by sight, and the affair happened almost under my very nose.

"There was a life convict. I forget now what he had done, but of course it was no small affair. He had red hair, with a sprinkling of gray in his beard; big and bony, with large, disagreeable eyes. He walked with a slight stoop, seeming to be thinking to himself; was very serious in his demeanor and lived apart from the rest. He was never mixed up in anything, either with the officials or the convicts. Six years he had lived on the Kara and should really soon have gone over to the trusted. Many wondered why he had not escaped in the many years.

"Well, he had a voice! I have heard not a few excellent voices and myself sang not badly in my younger days, but this was something superior. People there love songs, and good singers soon come together, but when Wasi Semionitsch began to sing everything became so still that you could hear a fly. Crowded in the door stood overseers, soldiers and convicts, listening to his favorite song, 'My Little Falcon Flies.'

"He sang rarely. They would gather around him in vain, for people there are fond of the convict and vagabond airs. But one evening he sang of his own incentive, and all came running and surrounded him in silence, as if he had cast a spell upon them. He sang a prison song, long and sad. I cannot exactly describe his voice to you—half like a powerful baritone, half tenor of unusual range and purity. I felt riveted to the spot, listening with breathless interest. It seemed so tender and simple, and yet it seemed to penetrate the heart like a knife. Then suddenly his voice burst forth like the roll of thunder and made one tremble. You would bow as though some subtle power were bending you to earth, and then all would sound soft and plaintive, and you breathed again. Even the commandant stood there with lowered head, apparently in a pensive mood.

"One day they brought in a new convict. He was an ugly fellow, not worth a puff of powder, weak, sickly, like a half grown child. He had beaten his wife to death, or his mistress, or something of the sort. He used to laugh much and showed the prisoners various tricks, like a clown. The convicts liked him because he was good natured, tractable and awkward, but specially because he knew a great many songs. His voice was not remarkable—weak and tremulous, but ineffably sad and tender.

"Well, Wasil Semionitsch formed an attachment to this man and he became his accompanist in singing, and they soon harmonized. The first would thunder away and the other would join in very tenderly, as if you heard some one weeping softly. If one ceased, the other would catch the last note, and then you would hear a powerful duet.

"And so it went on until spring came, and the Taiga awoke and became lively. But one must know what the Taiga is in spring!

"Well, it was spring, a spring morning, warm and bright. The snow had not quite melted, but in the valleys the grass was growing.

"Very early the convicts were led out to work, as they are always led by the elder and the soldiers who encircled them with their guns like a chain.

"Then Wasil Semionitsch struck up his favorite song, 'My Little Falcon Flies,' but he soon broke off. All had begun to prick up their ears.

"And now they began to plead. 'Sing, sing!' The elder himself approaches. 'Sing in Christos' name your song, Semionitsch, or have you only been tempting us?'

"He refused again and again. At last he said to the elder, 'Feodor Wasilitsch, don't appeal to me like that, for if I sing that song now, upon my word, I'll escape.'

"The elder laughed. Why should he not? Six years had he passed in prison. A hundred times had he scorned to fly, and here he said it aloud before the soldiers, and could he really mean it? It was a jest. 'Very well,' they said, 'fly, but sing first.'

"And the other repeated his speech: 'I tell you frankly I am not jesting. I'll escape. It is this way. I will sing, but on condition that you lay me low with a bullet. Do not use the butt of your guns, that I may not turn into a cripple!'

"The elder squinted to laugh. 'Oh, well sung, my falcon will fly better. It will reach you with the living hand, not like the butt end!'

"While they were talking in this way they were not far from the shaft. It is a sort of open passage that penetrates the earth where the gold is dug. The shaft was long and deep and extended to the base of the mountain. If you ascend it, the Taiga extends behind.

"And so Wasil Semionitsch calls his accompanist to him, and what they made out between them remains a secret. An agreement or a silent understanding, I know not. They sing, they go singing, and everybody listens.

"Now they reach the shaft. They descend, one after the other. The other convicts stand still at the edge of the shaft. The soldiers form a chain all about them, the guns in their hands, the butt at their feet—everything proper. They peer into the opening and listen.

"And the two walk slowly along the shaft and sing their song. Wasil Semionitsch takes a high note, rising ever higher, and his accompanist holds his. The one pauses, and the other takes the note. And they so sing together that one is often puzzled whether it is one or the other—just like one voice. Now they approach the end of the shaft, and the drift again leads upward, and as they ascend (so runs their song) the accompanist on this side, Wasil Semionitsch on the other. The one ascends slowly, then sits down. The other, undeterred, climbs upward faster and faster. The song dies out.

"Then suddenly before the eyes of all he quickly clambers up the mountain side. He is on the peak. Unobserved he had rid himself of his chains. He holds them in his hands. He swings them above his head and casts them far from him in a wide curve and screams in a shrill voice, 'Escaped!'

"Not until then, when the chain struck with clanking sound on the rock below, when he screamed out—not until then was the charm broken which his song had cast upon them all. Quick the guns to the eye. They fire. Ah, seek the wind in the field!

"That was the song of the Falcon."

"But then," I said, "the soldiers"—

"Ah, that is the marvelous!" he quickly interrupted me. "I reached there the day after, when the commandant was examining the affair. Did you not all see it, you blockheads?'

"'We did, your highness.'

"'Well, and yet he escaped? And you were all witnesses of his flight?'

"'We were, your highness.'

"'Well, then, how did it happen?'

"'Don't know, your highness. He misled us—cast darkness upon our senses.'

"'Fie, dunderhead!'

"The commandant was quite scarlet with anger and perspired prodigiously. Thereupon he detailed the occurrence to me. 'Isn't that too remarkable?' he said. 'All tell the same story. I have been vexing myself with the case for 21 hours, and the only thing I can hear is, "he misled us—cast darkness on our senses." Just think of it! He sang a song to them, and they prick up their ears and go daft. It's enough to drive a man crazy!'

"The elder was a good man; no blockhead at all. I knew him, and there he stood actually like a wooden image and stared at the commandant. That worthy purposely for my benefit called up all the soldiers. All of them told the same story. And he was gone—fled—the Falcon.

"Do you see, little father, what sort of voices we have in the Kara?" So the intendant concluded his story.—From the German.

Emerson For Woman Suffrage.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, in a Phi Beta Kappa oration on "The Progress of Culture," recounts the gains of the reform movement as follows:

Observe the marked ethical quality of the innovations urged or adopted. The new claim of woman to a political status is itself an honorable testimony to the civilization which has given her a civil status new in history. Now that by the increased humanity of law she controls her property she inevitably takes the next step to her share in power.

Again, in the "Essay on Civilization," he says:

Right position of woman in the state is another index. Place the sexes in the right relations of mutual respect, and a severe morality gives that essential charm to woman which educates all that is delicate, poetic and self sacrificing; breeds courtesy and learning, conversation and wit, in her rough mate, so that I have thought a sufficient measure of civilization is the influence of good women.

Longfellow.

Longfellow is the most popular poet yet born in America, and if we can measure popular approval by the widespread sale of his successive volumes he was probably the most popular poet of the English language in this century. Part of his popularity is due to his healthy mind, his calm spirit, his vigorous sympathy. His thought, though often deep, was never obscure. His lyrics had always a grace that took the ear with delight. They have a singing simplicity, caught, it may be, from the German lyrists, such as Uhland or Heine. This simplicity was the result of rare artistic repression. It was not due to any poverty of intellect.

Like Victor Hugo in France, Longfellow in America was the poet of childhood. And, as he understood the children, so he also sympathised with the poor, the toiling, the lowly, not looking down on them, but glorifying their labor and declaring the necessity of it and the nobility of work. He could make the barest life seem radiant with beauty. He had acquired the culture of all lands, but he understood also the message of his own country. He thought that the best that Europe could bring was none too good for the plain people of America. He was a true American, not only in his stalwart patriotism in the hour of trial, but in his loving acceptance of the doctrine of human equality and in his belief and trust in his fellow man.—Professor Brander Matthews in St. Nicholas.

Henry Irving Hissed.

Can any one imagine a more incredible thing than Mr. Irving being hissed? Yet this once happened and went on for a whole week. The story is told in Mr. Irving's own words.

"In my early days," says our greatest actor, "I accepted a stock engagement at a provincial theater and did not know until I got there that I had been put into the place of an actor who was locally very popular. He had not left, I believe, on altogether good terms with the management, so the audience vented their spleen upon his successor. I was that unfortunate person, and for a whole week he (not I was hissed every night, not for my bad acting, but out of love for my predecessor. I remember how every night I walked to my rooms, some two miles out of town, very wretched and walked in again the next night no less miserable. To this day I never pass the place by railway without a shudder."—London Answers.

Inexpensive Fire Alarm.

It is possible to construct a very simple and effective fire alarm at a trifling cost. To do this, all that is necessary is a quantity of cord, several small pulleys and some article of metal that will make a great clatter when it falls. The pulleys are placed around the ceiling close to the wall, the ends of the cord are tied together in a knot that will easily slip through the pulleys and to the cord is fastened a metal plate or whatever object may be selected to make the greatest amount of racket. The moment a blaze reaches the ceiling the cord is burned in two and the plate falls, making quite enough noise to rouse the entire household. It thought best, the cords may cross the middle of the room in addition to being put around the border.—New York Ledger.

HOLD AUNT BILLY.

How a Raleigh Man Got Even With Some Teamsters to Their Knees.

At one time Old Billy lived alone in a log house where the woods were dense and where the road, overlapped far above by the tops of the trees, was just wide enough for one wagon. It is related that one night in winter the old man was sitting by his fire when he heard furious oaths in the road. He had lived there long enough to know the cause. Two teamsters had met in the narrowest part of the road, and each one had refused to get down, turn his horses and back his wagon far enough into the briers for the other to pass. The preacher got up, hunting a stick, lighted his lantern and went out to the place where the two men were swearing at each other.

"Cease the blowing of your iniquitous spray," Old Billy commanded, waving his lantern.

"Who are you?" one of the teamsters shouted.

"I am a soldier of the cross."

"That so? What brigade?"

"The brigade of Galilee."

"Well, you go to headquarters and tell your commander that you have got a leetle bit out of your territory."

"Hah, it is evident that you don't respect my commander. But perhaps you respect me."

"Who are you?"

"I am known as Old Billy Hall."

"That so? Parson, I take it all back. Say, podner," he added, speaking to the other teamster, "we both better back our wagons and then draw straws by the light of the lantern to see who shall pull out first."

The other man was willing enough to adjust the difficulty, and graciously declared that he would back his horses and let the other man pass, and when this had been done Old Billy remarked: "You have very nicely smoothed over the offense which you gave each other, but what about the offense you have given my commander? Get down there in the road and pray or I'll whale the life out of both of you."

"Ain't that asking a leetle bit too much?"

"Get down or I will snatch you off that wagon!"

The man popped his whip at his horses, and the next moment Old Billy's hand was in his collar. He jerked him to the ground, dragged him until he was in reach of the other teamster, seized him, bumped their heads together, put his foot on them, on first one and then the other, and twisted them as though he would wring off their heads.

"Feel like praying now?"

"Believe I do," one of them answered.

"I never was so ken to pray in my life," the other one spoke up.

"Well, come into the house."

He prayed with them, broiled meat and fed them and sent them on their way.—"Could Fight as Well as Pray," Boston Herald.

Language of the Dog's Tail.

"Organic Evolution," by Professor Elmer frankly admits that it is unable to offer an explanation for the curious fact that the dogs of Constantinople, and Turkey in general, carry their tails in an erect posture, while the jackal and wolf (reckoned as the dog's ancestral relatives) allow their caudal appendages to hang or "trail" behind. Dr. Joseph L. Hancock seeks to enlighten the professor and suggests that the reason is to be sought in the fact that as the dog becomes domesticated it uses the tail as an organ of expression—wagging it when pleased or dropping it between the legs when disgusted, frightened or displeased. Dr. Hancock also says that wolves and jackals carry the tail hanging down because in that position it is less conspicuous and better eludes detection. As the dog gradually became domesticated, the tail by degrees assumed an upright position, this result being brought about by the evolution of the creature's mind.

After years of fondling and petting on the part of their masters and of the dog's growing ideas of his own importance (and seeing no cause for "slinking" about in perpetual fear), the appendage became the organ of expression. It may be added that the cessation of natural selection in the domestic dog would give the tail greater freedom of motion without the animal having a fear that a spasm of erect "wagging" might betray its whereabouts to some stealthy hunter, and the ages of artificial existences have made the dog's tail express every feeling of which he is subject.—St. Louis Republic.

"Yes, the Die Is Cast."

"Yes, the Die Is Cast," has a romantic history. It was written by Colonel Paul Pestel of the Russian army, who, with others, conspired against the Russian government in 1823. The plot was discovered, he was arrested, imprisoned, tried and on July 11, 1826, was hanged. During the interval between his trial and execution he composed the words and music of this song and with a bit of iron scratched them on the wall of his cell, where the song was found some years after his death.

Letters of Anger.

Good men and women are often tempted to speak or write hard things of their neighbors. Those who have grace enough will steadily resist this temptation, but the worldly will often yield to it unless restrained by policy. When a Christian has been wronged, he should remember the counsel of St. James, "Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." If at any time one should, in a sudden fit of passion, write a scathing letter, he should not mail it at once but keep it two or three days. It will be well to withhold it until after the Sabbath. Perhaps after the hallowed influences of the holy day have come upon him he will not send the letter. Many a letter has been written under a spell of wrath and sent in haste which would never have gone if the author had delayed for a day. His wrath would have cooled, his judgment would have had time to act, his conscience would have been heard from, his memory would have called up the wholesome counsels of the word of God. He would have spared himself and others much pain and trouble.—Philadelphia Times.

The New Woman's Preserver.

She threw her round, white arms about his neck and kissed him full on the lips. "My preserver!" she murmured cooingly.

"I am glad you like them, dear," said the happy man. "Of course, I am not an expert yet as father was in preserving peaches, but a few more years of practice, and I will improve."

As she sat in the sitting room, smoking her after dinner cigar, she could hear him humming softly as he washed the evening dishes.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Receipts of Cotton at the Ports—New York Sun's Review of the Market.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

NEW YORK, June 21.—The following are the net receipts of cotton at all the ports since September 1, 1894: Galveston 1,651,858; New Orleans 2,567,298; Mobile 250,582; Savannah 940,308; Charleston 427,189; Wilmington 284,514; Norfolk 469,566; Baltimore 117,632; New York 187,686; Boston 299,135; Newport News 33,630; Philadelphia 122,239; West Point 285,874; Brunswick 108,344; Velasco 592; Port Royal 158,879. Total 7,879,961.

NEW YORK, June 21.—The Sun says: Cotton rose three to six points and closed very steady with sales of 193,900 bales. New Orleans advanced nine to ten points, showing more strength to-day than New York, as it showed more weakness yesterday. Liverpool declined 1-32d with spot sales of 10,000 bales. Futures dropped two to three points, but rallied and closed firm at a loss of only one point for the day. In Manchester yarns were weak and cloths irregular. The Southern spot markets were quiet and unchanged. Spot prices here were unaltered; 61 bales sold for spinning and 1 500 were shipped direct to Europe. Port receipts 4 719 bales, including "various," against 1,658 last Friday and 4,479 last year. Total for week 15,088 bales against 14,903 last week and 13,806 last year. Total interior receipts for the week 3,883 bales against 3,924 last week and 7,877 last year. Shipments 8 915 bales against 15,975 last week and 18,983 last year. Stocks 70,997 bales, against 74 754 last week and 88,499 last year.

To day's features: Very heavy rains in Texas, bad floods in the central part of that State, copious rains in Mississippi and Louisiana, unexpected steadiness in Liverpool, considerable strength in New Orleans, anticipations of an unfavorable crop report in to-morrow's Chronicle and pretty good buying for local, New Orleans and Continental account caused higher prices. The crop is late, and grassy over a considerable area of the cotton belt, and the believers in a short crop find their faith growing stronger from day to day. Liverpool sold a little, but this had no effect. Both fractions in the speculation are watching developments in the Southwest, particularly in Texas. Private Manchester advices were more favorable.

The Louisville Courier-Journal says: Cotton has gone up, corn has gone up and wheat has gone up. The advance in wheat came too late to affect the sowing, and the cut worms and other causes have interfered with the corn and cotton planting. It is now reasonably certain that the cotton acreage has been greatly reduced. Under these circumstances cotton is likely to be much higher next fall. The great Southern staple has been cleaned up to a surprising extent, over 6,000,000 bales having been shipped across the water, and comparatively little unsold is being left in the interior or sea ports. Even should be all that could be desired, there is no probability that the crop will approach the mammoth one of 1893-94. Consumption was greatly stimulated by the low prices, and stocks were rapidly cleaned up, so the amount carried over cannot be alarming. There is another consideration. During the long period of depression prices on every agricultural staple got too low. This was particularly the case with cotton. Now that business has improved, it is easy to see that five cents was an unreasonable figure, and that it is unlikely to drop that low again without another such a combination of causes. In spite of all the arguments advanced for diversified farming, cotton is still the king of Southern staples. The big planters must continue to grow it, for there is no other crop which can take its place, and their laborers, teams and tools must be employed. The small farmer and the tenant cannot quit it, for it is their sole reliance for cash. The prosperity of the South is thus bound up inextricably with the cotton interest and must continue so for years. The prospect of better prices is the most cheering thing, therefore, that the ten cotton States have had to look forward to for many a weary day.

IMPOSING CEREMONIES

AT THE LAYING OF THE KEYSTONE OF THE GERMAN SHIP CANAL.

With Imperial Pomp by Emperor Wilhelm —Thousands of People in Attendance— Grand Naval Pageant—Accident to the Launch of the American War Ship San Francisco.

By Cable to the Morning Star.

KIEL, June 21.—Everybody was stirring at an early hour this morning, securing places of vantage to see the ceremony of laying the keystone of the canal at Holtenau. Dozens of steamers went from Kiel to places near the lock, among which was the press steamer, which was allotted a good place. Invited guests, and those who had secured tickets for the tribunes, arrived between the hours of 10 and 10 30.

Thousands flocked to Holtenau by land and water. Never did the harbor of Kiel present so animated an appearance. The warm sun from early morning shone upon hundreds of gaily decorated vessels and majestic looking warships at anchor. Dozens of vessels are flitting from one point of the bay to another.

The Kaiser went to Holtenau early on board a steam launch. The entire highway from Kiel to the mouth of the canal had been beflagged. The country here is remarkably beautiful. Trees line the road for the greater part of the distance and here and there groves of beech woods, affording cool shade, are passed. At places where the country is open glimpses of the bay and distant sea are afforded. Innumerable triumphal arches, bearing mottoes and portraits of the Emperor, had been erected, and the villages and hamlets on the short route showed a profusion of flags and bunting.

Holtenau which gives its name to the new lock, is picturesquely situated four or five miles from Kiel, and nearly a mile from the mouth of the canal, where the foundation stone was laid.

The arrangements at the scene of the ceremony were excellently devised.

Grand stands of vast proportions had been erected for guests and ticket-holders. The Emperor, whose arrival was the signal of deafening cheers, was in Admiral's uniform and walked to his place with martial bearing. He acknowledged the enthusiastic greetings smilingly. His Majesty having taken a standing position before the Diet, Chancellor Hohenlohe asked the imperial assent to commence the proceedings, and then read a document relating to the ceremony, after which the Kaiser approached the stone, and receiving a mallet from the Bavarian plenipotentiary in the Bundesrath, tapped the stone thrice. The stone also received blows from the Royal Princes present, from the members of the Bundesrath, ministers of State and a score of other State officials. The stone being laid, the Kaiser returned to his place at the dais. At the conclusion of the ceremonies at the keystone, the Emperor went on board the Hohenzollern, where he took luncheon. Salutes to his Majesty were fired by several of the war-ships in the bay.

It had been arranged in the course of the preparations for the celebration that the assembled war-ships should steam past the Hohenzollern in review, but for some unexplained reason, it was decided later that the Emperer's yacht should merely steam through the lines of the German and foreign fleets lying at anchor. This was accordingly done, all of the ships saluting the Hohenzollern as she passed. All of the ships were literally covered with flags and in the bright sunshine made a magnificent spectacle.

Miss Herbert, daughter of the U. S. Secretary of the Navy, with a party of friends, was on board the America Cruiser New York.

LONDON, June 21.—The Morning Post will to-morrow publish a dispatch from Kiel, saying that at 8 o'clock Friday morning, the boiler of a launch belonging to the American war-ship San Francisco, exploded. Two men were seriously and two slightly injured. The launch was returning to the ship with provisions at the time of the accident. The launch and the sufferers were taken to the San Francisco by a longboat from one of the German war ships.

CAPT. HOWGATE.

Convicted on Each Indictment—An Attempt to be Made to Take the Case to a Higher Court.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—The jury in the Howgate case brought in a verdict at 1.35 p. m. to-day of guilty on each indictment. One indictment charged Howgate with forgery, and the other with falsification of official accounts. The attorneys for the defence at once moved for a new trial. No action was taken by the court.

The penalty for the offences of which Capt. Howgate was convicted is confinement in penitentiary from one to ten years in each case, so that the punishment in his case may be confinement from two to twenty years. Accompanying the verdict was a recommendation to the Court for clemency. It is hardly believed that Judge McComas will grant a new trial, but the attempt will be made to take the case to a higher Court on appeal.

Capt. Howgate spent last night in jail, he having given himself up to the Court as soon as the case went to the jury. Just when sentence will be passed upon him is not known. The verdict was a surprise, as an acquittal had been confidently expected.

SOUTHERN RAILROAD CO.

A New Deal to Keep the S. A. L. Out of Florida and the Plant System Out of Atlanta.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

ATLANTA, GA., June 21.—The Southern Railway has bought the Atlanta & Florida Railroad. The line is 104 miles long, and extends from Atlanta to Fort Valley, in the heart of the peach section. At the price paid, about $365,000, the Southern gets the road for one-tenth of what it cost. The Southern buys it from the Central Trust Co., of New York.

This deal nips several possible railway extension schemes in the bud. It keeps the Seaboard Air Line out of Florida, and the Plant system out of Atlanta.

S. C. DISPENSARY.

Three Suits Constable Sent to Jail by Judge Simonton of the U. S. Court.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

CHARLESTON, June 21.—In the United States Court to-day Judge Simonton sentenced three Dispensary constables to jail for contempt of court. They are charged with seizing liquors sent into the State for private use, against the injunction granted by this court. The constables are sentenced to two months imprisonment, and will be confined thereafter until the seized liquor is returned to the owners.

BUSINESS SITUATION.

BRADSTREET'S REPORT THE OUTLOOK GENERALLY FAVORABLE.

Improvement Noted in Dry Goods and Groceries at Southern Points, and a Better Feeling in Trade Circles.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

NEW YORK, June 21.—Bradstreet's to-morrow will say:

The feature of business this week is the customary check to activity in trading in staple products of merchantable, due to the near approach of midsummer, with the accompanying stock taking in some lines. In addition to this, perhaps the only other not pointing to improvement is the reaction of prices of cotton, coal, wheat, flour, corn, oats, pork and lard, from previous relatively high levels. In almost all other directions reports on the business situation and outlook are exceptionally favorable.

The New York stock market keeps its strength in face of high rates and the absence of foreign interest. Favorable crop prospects, especially in Southwestern territory and the rise in iron and steel prices, create a bullish professional temper, under which realizing sales have little effect. The return of one of the bond syndicate leaders from Europe is regarded as a bullish influence.

Notwithstanding the reaction in the price of cotton, cotton goods in some instances are higher, with the market quiet, and likely to remain so until after July 4th. Woollen goods are quiet, with mills fairly well employed where labor troubles have not interfered. Trading in wool has been very heavy, and while sales at the West have been made at low prices, quotations have since advanced ¾ to 1c per pound, thus apparently placing wool in line with leather, wheat, corn, cotton, iron and steel. Among the staples which have enjoyed a revival the demand for iron and steel continues, perhaps, the most striking feature. In a few instances certain grades of iron have enjoyed the unusual distinction of having quotations advanced twice within the week. Since the rise in prices began pig iron has advanced $6 and steel billets about 30 per cent. in price, and the reserve plant is being pressed into service.

In the Southern States business continues at about midsummer proportions, with improvement in dry goods and groceries at Chattanooga and Atlanta, a better feeling in trade circles at Birmingham, and only a moderate expansion of business at Galveston.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Wheat, Corn and Oats Weak and Lower—A Further Decline in Prices of Pork Products.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

CHICAGO, June 21.—Disgusted and disheartened bulls were still engaged in selling out their wheat to-day. The big bear raiders covered without any serious trouble, although a recovery of 1¾c from the bottom was recorded at the close. There was, however, a lower range of prices all day, and a net loss from yesterday of 1¾c was finally established. Beginning at a decline, further weakness made itself felt during the morning, and it was not until after noon that any returning strength was noted. July wheat opened from 70¾c to 70¾c, sold between 71¼c and 69¾c, closing at 70¾c—with the loss already mentioned. Cash wheat was weak and 1¾c lower.

Corn—No effort was made to resist the weakness that came from wheat to corn. Business was not large or important enough to divert attention from wheat. Local traders and scalpers followed the fluctuations of the finer grain and based their action thereon. July corn opened at 48¾c, sold between 49c and 48c, closing at 48¾c—¾c lower than yesterday. Cash corn was ¾@¾c lower.

Oats—Prices rose and fell with those of wheat and corn. There was scarcely any independence of action and little news to affect values. Cash oats were ¼c per bushel lower. July closed ¼@¼c under yesterday.

Provisions were weak, partly on the grain markets, partly on a decline in hogs, and partly on general principles. The turning over received by product bulls had not been forgotten, and dreading another break the crowd showed uneasiness. There was nothing of an exciting nature in the trade, however, and the close was quite tame. July 7½c lower, July lard a shade lower, and July ribs 2½c lower.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Horrible Scene in a Station of the Harlem Railroad at Fishkill, N. Y.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

FISHKILL, June 21.—A horrible case of murder and suicide occurred here at 10.15 o'clock this morning, in which Harry Krooze and George Jacobi were the victims. Krooze is agent of the Harlem Railroad here, having filled the position for the past twenty-three years. Jacobi is his father-in-law and acts as the assistant agent. Krooze was about 43 years of age and Jacobi 69. Krooze killed Jacobi by shooting him twice in the back of the head, and then killed himself by firing a bullet into his own head. The motive for the crime is a mystery, as both were on the friendliest terms. The shooting occurred just before a passenger train was due. The only person in the station besides the dead men was a woman, waiting for the train. When she heard the shot she gave the alarm. Before anybody else reached the station the passenger train had arrived and the conductor and trainmen found the dead men, both having died instantly.

Krooze shot Jacobi in the back of the head as the latter was seated at the desk writing. Krooze had been discharged and the relief agent was on the train that arrived shortly after the tragedy occurred to relieve him. There is said to be no shortage in his accounts, but that he had become careless in doing his business. Krooze leaves a wife and four children.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Things We Understand, And Things We Do Not Understand.

The Depositor in the Wilmington Savings and Trust Company

Does not understand how the decline in price of silver since 1873 caused the price of cotton to decline, when the price of cotton declined more rapidly for several years before '73 (when silver did not decline materially) than after '73, and was lower several years before the war than at present, though silver was twice as high at that time as it is at present. The same depositor does understand that his money in the draws interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, compounded quarterly. He is therefore provided with a good Umbrella when the "rainy day" comes.

—THE—

Wilmington Savings and Trust Company,

Has the largest capital of any strictly Savings Bank in North Carolina, and is fortified with a good percentage of surplus for the protection of depositors. This Bank invites investigation, and wishes to see every mechanic, merchant, salaried man and others, keep a Savings Bank account and save something each week.

From Dr. Wm. H. Taylor, State Chemist and Professor of Chemistry and Toxicology, Medical College of Virginia:

I have analyzed the Tivoli Hofbrau Beer, manufactured by the Robert Portner Brewing Company, of Alexandria, Va., and find that it is pure and, in all respects, of excellent quality. It is unexcelled as a beverage, and I recommend it especially for medicinal use.

MERCER & GAYLORD

ARE GIVING

Bargains

That will Astonish you more than Ever Before.

ALTHOUGH the advance in Leather and Shoes continues all over this land and country, especially at the great manufactoring centers, we had bought out the entire Shoe Stock of H. C. Evans, 115 Princess street, and had placed contracts with manufacturers at old prices, before the rise began, which enables us to hold the prices down, within easy reach of all classes, for some time to come.

We come as near fitting the fancy, the foot and the pocket, as any Shoe Store in the land, when the above three essentials must be met in one fit.

It is useless for us to devote much of this space in quoting prices, but we urge you to call at our place and see the Bargains as they are.

We have Baby Shoes, yet, which are going at 10c per pair. Some Ladies' Button and Lace at 50c. Some Ladies' and Misses' Slippers at 35c (yes, leather, at that). Women's Web Slippers at 10c. Men's Calf Boots at $1.25. Men's Heavy Boots at $1.49, and many lots of other goods in like proportion.

We cordially invite you to examine our stock, and respectfully solicit your patronage.

Yes, it's time to order your Summer outfit, and in matters of dress the first commandment is, never put off for to-morrow what ought to be done to day. The time to order is now, and the place, well, you won't have any doubt upon this point if you just step in and look over our stock of Summer Suitings and furthermore, see what high class tailoring really means as illustrated and exemplified in the made to order suits which we are producing for the most stylishly dressed men in town, at from $12.50 to $15.00 each.

POPULAR PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS AT $3.00.
